The Daily Standard. Thursday, July 21, 1870.

The Mews. The latest telegraphic dates from London, Paris, and Berlin are to July 19th. They bring no indication of a peaceful or even a speedy solution of the Franco-Prussian difficulty. Everything that comes to hand portends a general European war. Everything indicates the Eogland as well as continental nations expect to be called on to take part in the bloody struggle, France asks for a fresh levy of 90,000 to 140,000 men, but the Minister of War intimates that they may not be required before January 1871. This demand means apparently that Napoleon will call into action every soldier that the Corps Lugislatif will grant, and if necessary prolong the war indefinitely to attain his ends. England is counting and concentrating her troops in the home depots ready for service, while the greatest activity prevails in the navy. The English press and people seem to be intensely Prussian, whilst meetings in favor of Prussia are to come off, led by members of Parliament and working-men. The sentiment of the British people is evidently against France, as not a syllable is sent by the wires in her favor. All look upon the action of the Emperor as aggressive, and it is difficult to see how any one can strive at any other conclusion, if the matter be viewed dispassionately. The war, however, seems to be confined to active hostilities between France and Prassin,—but contiguous nations are virtually parties to the struggle. On the Northern boundary of Prussia stand 250,000 Russians in two corps of observation, ready at any moment to move against France whom they last met at Sebastopol. We hear but little as to what Austria is doing; but it is impossible to suppose that her forces can be idle and disinterested spectators of the Franco-Prussian duel. More than likely the movement of Austrian forces shave in duced Russia to take up her bold stand on the frontier. Denmark and Italy are ready to join France with unconditional aid: the former to regain Science Holastein; the latter to satisfy the lovers of Italian unity by annexing the Papat States and making Rome the modern as well as the ancient capital of Italy. Hence both the Dane and Italian must be in a state of war. Belgium and Holland on one side and Wirtemburg and Bavaria on the other side of Prussian terthe soil of each at any moment may be made a battle-field. Belgium ritory must also be in a state of war; for and Holland are striving to escape, but if they avoid the smoke and din of arms they will have hassed through every phase of war, but the battle and its consequences. Wirtemburg and Bavaria, we were told, have declared for Prussia and Faderland, instead of Austria. They too, then, are virtually at war. Spain and Portugal in the south, and Sweden and Norway in the north, appear to be the only spectators of the struggle. All Europe besides is boiling over with the war excitement; all Europe is in arms. No wonder then that England and Englishmen denounce the Emperor for plunging a noble peo-ple like the French into an aggressive war, that has destroyed the peace and quiet of all Europe. Events justify the judgment. Neither the events attendant on 'Sebastapool, Solferino, nor nor Sadowa, over excited Europe and the world like the present war. Where it will end no one can foresee. The fagt that a Prussian army is in France and ims attacking Mets throws little light light on the campaign. It was no great effort for a Prussian army to leave its own territory and advance a few miles into France, towards Metz. The breaking up of bridges, however, by the Belgians shows that the French army had been moving along the Belgian border to meet the Prussians, possibly along the line be-tween Ardennes and Metz. What line of march the French army is taking in its advance into Prussia it is difficult to determine by the telegrams. The most probable route is that by way of Strasbourg into Bades and Hesse, where it can operate against Pressis, and at the same time hold Wirtemberg and Bavaria in check. The Prussian line seems, however, to be designed to cut off the communication of the French with France. Owing to the vigilance exercised to keep all intelligence of the movements of each army a secret, we may have to wait a few days before getting telegrams that will indicate clearly the objects of the hostile armies.

A. Gilmore is still closing out the balance of his ready-made stock of Clothing, at cost. Germents made stock of corder according to the latest styles, and at greatly reduced prices. Therefore, let your motto be to develop our resources by having your garments made to order at A. Gilmore's where perfection is guaranteed. Also, a large assortment of the best quality of Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings on hand. Come and see me.

FROM THE INTERIOR .- From Mr. G. Jennnings, who arrived last night on the steamer Enterprise from the interior of the mainland we learn the following: On Antler creek there are about 150 men working, and they have just commenced to fake out pay. On Cunningham creek Mesers. Draper, Sharpe & Co. are taking out big pay; others are doing well. On Keith ey creek the prospects are excellent; there are about 100 men at work. On Lightning creek mining is brisk and the claims paying as well as ever. On William creek the claims that were stopped by the Porks of Quesnelle the Chinamen are taking out plenty of gold. The crops are all looking stell along the road. The grasshoppers are becoming a serious cause of annoyance about Williams' lake. ANN'S CONVENT EXAMINATION .- The midsummer examination of the pupils of St. Ann's Convent took place yesterday, and as usual a large number of visitors and parents of the pupils were present. The school is largely attended by day scholars, and the number of orphans educated and clothed free of charge, has increased during the past year. This is the only orphan school in the colony, and we should like to see the public come forward and assist with their mite the worthy object which the ladies, under whose charge the orphans are, are working for.
